

Table of contents

7	Acknowledgements
9	Author's note
11	Foreword
	Ecosophy for the Plantationocene
	Maan Barua
15	Introduction
	On elephants and humans in contemporary anthropology
	Elephants and the Khamti in Northeast India	16
	Asian elephants (Elephas maximus) in the Northeast and beyond	16
	The Khamti: a population who daily live and work with elephants	20
	Tai Buddhist people inhabiting low lands of South and Southeast Asia	21
	Agency, Elephants, and labour	28
	Animals and the ontological turn	28
	Do elephants work?	31
	Apprehending interspecies labour	34
	From work to working with: collective and individual dimensions of labour, 35 — Conduct rather than behaviour as an interpretive frame, 37 — Understanding interspecies communication, 37
	A desanthropocentric anthropology	38
	Producing a Multispecies Ethnography	43
	Towards multiperspectivism	44
	Fieldwork and informants	45
	Overview of the study	46

Part 1

49 Catching forest elephants

≈ Introduction of the first part ≈ 51

53 Mela shikar. A perilous venture

Capturing elephant in Northeast India 53

- The specialists of the hunt: the phandi 56
- Composition of the team 58

Current context 58

- Season, place and duration of expeditions 58
- Risks and dangers of the operations 60

63 Spirits and Divinations

Preparing the expedition 63

- Khanan mogsue, the capturer's almanac 64
- Pak chang, the elephant's mouth 66

Personal Protection 67

- Phi Huen: the spirit of the house 67
- Phi hai: the bad spirits 68

Leaving the village, entering the forest 69

- The practice of pang lao 69
 - Feeding the phi muang - tutelary soil spirit, 71
- Specific deities linked with elephant catching operations 74
 - Making a ritual exchange with Chao Pling Chang, the wild elephant mahout, 74 — Being associated with Utingna, the lord of wild forest elephants, 81
- Other practices and beliefs 84
 - Sai taiket: the suicide rope, 84 — Warding off the evil eye - hoo mulung, 85

89 Human-Konkie Collaboration

Current framework of a capture operation 89

- Harnessing the konkie 89
- Tools and specific items related to a capture operation 90
- Supplies and necessities for kani (opium) consumption 91

Tales of a capture 94

- Stalking: a silent operation 94
- The race for the capture 95
- A rapid camp stop and return to the village 95

Between phandi and konkie: an intimate relationship 98

- Konkie intuition 98
- The complicity between an owner and his elephant 98

≈ Conclusion of the first part ≈ 100

Part 2

103	Socialising forest elephants
	≈ Introduction of the second part ≈	104
107	A difficult period for the animal
	Preparing the operations	108
	Habituating the elephant	116
	The apprenticeship of commands	128
137	Music to create bonds
	Singing to socialise elephants	137
	Contents of the chants	140
	Chants used during the first training step	140
	Chant sung during the second step	143
	Chants: constitutive element of Khamti-elephant relationships	146
	Oral poetry and shared knowledge in Northeast India	146
	The songs: a media to support attention support between men and elephants, 146
149	The beginning of the new life of the elephant
	Feeding the village elephant	149
	Keeping the animal	153
	Bathing the elephant: a privileged moment to consolidate bonds	153
	≈ Conclusion of the second part ≈	158

Part 3

163	Working with timber elephants
	≈ Introduction of the third part ≈	164
167	From the forest to the factory: the timber industry
	Historical background	167
	Present disinterest for Timber products	171
	Current rules and regulations	174
	Organisation and processing of operations	175
	Tree selection	178

181	Human-elephant collaboration in timber operations
	A work of strength for the animals?	181
	Dragging the logs	181
	Loading the truck: strength, precision and clumsiness all in one	191
	Helping the truck	202
	Interspecies cooperation in timber operations	203
	A communication based on animal intelligence	203
	The question of authority	207
	An adaptation of the animal's conduct to his partners, 209
	 ≈ Conclusion of the third part ≈	214
217	Conclusion
	Interspecies labour as an ecosophy
	Becoming a konkie: from capturing operations to labour collectives	218
	An elephantine culture at the village?	222
	Revisiting the (non-) domestication of Asian elephants	223
	The shared life of the Khamti and elephants	227
	Labour: the condition of living with elephants	227
	The Khamti as elephant protectors	228
	Implications of interspecies Labour in the Anthropocene	230
	Ecological neo-colonialism	230
	Maintaining the meaning and presence of elephants in villages	232
	Interspecies labour as an ecosophy: humans, elephants, and ecosystems	235
239	Glossary
	Assamese Glossary	239
	Tai Glossary	242
247	References
259	List of illustrations
261	Index of names and places
265	Thematic index	